But it will still be hard to have enough water to irrigate all the acreage that needs it. The water available for irrigation purposes is limited. It's a very scarce commodity. And given the projected growth in population, the limited amounts available will be even more limited. The growth in population is projected to be about 1.5 percent per year, so each family in the Commonwealth is expected to expand their gardens over time. That's why the New Englanders are going to have to grow more food at home. It's a difficult problem, but the limited water resources are the real challenge. And we're going to have to work hard to make sure that everyone has enough water to irrigate their gardens.
