together, but rather let them be scattered, so that they may be more easily found and used. This will be done by placing them in small boxes or cases, which will be labeled with their names and descriptions. The boxes will be arranged in a convenient place, such as a shelf or a cabinet, where they can be easily seen and handled. The labels will be made of paper, with the names of the plants written in ink. The boxes will be made of wood, with glass tops, so that the plants can be seen through the glass. The plants will be arranged in a way that will make it easy to find them, and to identify them. The boxes will be placed in a row, with the labels facing outward. REPLIES, and was last seen January 31st, 1970. Many women reported to us that they had been taken to a doctor and given a "shot" which turned out to be a contraceptive injection of Depo-Provera. This drug, although it has been shown to have a negative effect on the libido, does not appear to have any effect on the contraceptive function of the uterus.
