and the first half of the twentieth century, the U.S. government's policies were aimed at assimilating Native Americans into the dominant white culture. This process, known as "Americanization," sought to eliminate Native American languages, customs, and traditions. It was particularly evident in the education system, where Native children were often sent to boarding schools far from their homes and forced to speak English and abandon their cultural practices. The impact of this policy was profound, leading to a loss of language and cultural knowledge across many communities.
