After the trial, the court will issue a written judgment. This document will state the facts of the case, the evidence presented, and the court's decision. It will also include a statement of costs and expenses, if applicable. The judgment will be signed by the judge and filed with the clerk's office.

Once the judgment is issued, it will become final. This means that it cannot be appealed or modified. The parties involved will be notified of the judgment and given time to file an appeal, if they choose to do so. If no appeal is filed, the judgment will become final and binding.

The judgment will also contain a statement of costs and expenses. This includes attorney fees, witness fees, and other expenses related to the trial. The party who wins the case will be entitled to recover these costs from the losing party. The losing party may be required to pay interest on the amount of the judgment. The judgment will also contain a statement of damages. This is the amount of money that the plaintiff is entitled to receive as compensation for the harm suffered. The amount of damages will depend on the facts of the case and the law applicable to the case.
