The practice may be limited to a certain type of professional services, such as accounting or legal services, or it may be broader, covering all professional services. Such restrictions are often imposed by law or regulation to protect the public interest. For example, in the United States, the American Bar Association's Model Rules of Professional Conduct prohibit lawyers from advertising their services, while the Code of Ethics of the American Institute of Accountants prohibits accountants from advertising their services. In some countries, such as the United Kingdom, there are no restrictions on advertising by professionals.
