On August 1, 1937, the Board of Directors of the Bank of America, N.A., approved a resolution to merge the Bank of America with the Bank of California, N.A., and to change its name to the Bank of America, N.A. The merger was completed on September 1, 1937, and the new bank became the largest bank in the United States. The new bank's assets exceeded $1 billion, and it had over 1,000 branches throughout the country. The merger was the result of a long-standing desire by the two banks to combine their resources and operations. The new bank's name, "Bank of America," reflected the fact that the merged institution would be a national bank, serving all of the major cities and towns in the United States. The new bank's stock was traded on the New York Stock Exchange, and it quickly became one of the most successful and well-known banks in the world.
