After all arguments have been made fully in both of the above columns, all available time may be used by the manager and the chief engineer to make a final judgment of the soundness of the plan and to advise the chief engineer to accept or reject the plan. If the plan is accepted, the chief engineer will issue the order and the chief engineer will be responsible for its execution. Because plans are often subject to changes, and to the interpretation of terms, it is suggested that the chief engineer make his final judgment concerning final plans after the chief engineer has
