for the present, however, we must content ourselves with a few general remarks. The first point to notice is that the number of species of birds in the world is very large, and that the number of species of birds in any one country or even in any one state is also very large. This is due to the fact that birds are found throughout the world, and that they are particularly abundant in the tropics. The second point to notice is that the distribution of birds is not uniform, but is rather patchy, with many gaps and discontinuities. This is due to the fact that birds are often restricted to certain habitats, such as forests, deserts, and mountains, and that they are often absent from other habitats, such as cities and towns. The third point to notice is that the distribution of birds is often correlated with the distribution of other organisms, such as plants and mammals. This is due to the fact that birds often depend on other organisms for food, shelter, and nesting sites. The fourth point to notice is that the distribution of birds is often influenced by human activity, such as deforestation, urbanization, and hunting. This is due to the fact that birds are often persecuted by humans, either directly or indirectly, through habitat destruction and overhunting.
